This mistrial is almost as bad as an acquittal. With the evidence at the command of the prosecution, far stronger, the lawyers say, than in the Sharp case, there ought to have been a conviction.

Are the people to make up their minds that there are to be no more convictions for the crime of 1884; that the last hope of bringing the guilty to punishment was killed by the vote at the last municipal election ? - It would almost seem so, for there is now but little use in trying Kerr again, and even Jachne is making an effort for release.

LET IT BE DONE.

The authorities appear to be resolved that the Elm street widening shall be conducted on the "how not to do it " principle. Everybody except a handful of interested jobbers and a few cranks are in favor of giving this second Broadway to the city and relieving that choked-up thoroughfare. The business of the city has clamored for the great improvement for years. It might have been well on its way to completion now if Mayor HEWITT had not tied his temper in a hard double knot over it and obstructed the work.

Now the Board of Street Openings has started a needless inquiry on three questions. all of which ought to have been decided months and months ago.

What the people want is the broad, straight, direct widening of Elm street so as to make a continuous second Broadway down to the City Hall, the removal of the worthless Register's Building and the consequent enlargement of the Park area. The question of widening Nassau or William street will come in afterwards, but let us first have the opening of Elm street and the removal of the Register's Building at once.

The faithful Democrats are flocking towards St. Louis from the East, the West, the North and the South. The crowds that are on their way to the Democratic lovefeast prove how great an interest the Democ rats feel in holding on to power now that they have got it, to say nothing of the offices which are gradually becoming all their

As a matter of fact, the Democratic Convention is only a ratification meeting. The country has already chosen the candidate. The candidate has already proclaimed and foreclosed the platform. Not a man who goes to St. Louis dreams of anybody as the nominee but GROVER CLEVELAND, Nobody is silly enough not to know that the President's tariff revision message is already the platform.

With the Chicago Convention it will be different. There it will be a free fight for the nomination. As to the platform, it may be safely predicted that the Republicans will declare strongly for protection to American labor and American industries, with a declaration in favor of a " wise revision" of the tariff by its friends, not by its enemies; a reduction of taxation, the abolishment of internal revenue, and a strong denunciation of English Free Trade.

Mr. STEVENS might have expected to lose his pocketbook or even a good share of his fortune in his dealings with a Chicago lawyer, but not his ear. Nor could he possibly have anticipated being called upon to give up a portion of his cheek in a place which has such an ample supply already. But such is life-in Chicago.

The Governor has signed a large number of bills recently, among them the Police Station Matron Bill and the Canal Appropristion. He gets to work again to-day. The fill to change the present excellent manage ent of the Brooklyn Bridge is not yet and the people ought to respect. The Governor has thirty days after the adjournment to insist that the people have rights which the politicians ought to respect. The Governor's time is short, but the Governor's action ought to be all the more firm and unyielding.

MEN WHO HAVE RISEN.

HIRAM P. DEWEY.

In the field of business and mercantile enterprise the man who introduces a new industry or who signally develops one already known is entitled to much consideration. Though he may be the prime gainer himselfand it is only just that he should bethousands of bread-winners are given work and secure the various blessings which flow

Especially is such a business man worthy of commendation when American products are supplied as substitutes for foreign ones, When this is done by an American it would seem as if the typical business man of the United States was found.

Hiram P. Dewey is an American who makes American wines, brandies and champagnes. They are not American wines merely because they are made in America but because they are made from grapes that grow on American soil. Mr. Dewey was born in Poultney, Ballard County, Vt., in the year 1816, but in his infancy his family moved to Middleboro. They lived there only four years, when they removed again to Chelsea, in the same State. They lived there seven years, and Mr. Dewey got his earlier education in that town. He began going to school when he was six years old.

From Chelses he went to Detroit, Mich. At that time it was a small place of only five or six thousand inhabitants. After four years in Detroit he made another remove and went to Sandusky, O., where he remained till he was nineteen years old.

Young Dewey had left school at fourteen and learned watchmaking from his father, who was engaged in that trade. His schooling was over, and everything he knows outside these few years of training he has picked up

Mr. Dewey's next move was to Fort Wayne, Ind, where he set up by himself in watchmaking, which he practised for eight years and then returned to Sandusky. All that he has ever had he has earned himself. He even manufactured some of the tools and instruments which he needed for his work. The two next years he devoted to making church clocks, and then went to Tiffin, O., where he remained till his father's death, in 1849, on the 29th day of July.

It was the "cholera year," and hundreds and thousands were being swept away by the relentless scourge. There were fifty-three deaths from it in New York City on the very day in which his father died of it.

Mr. Dewey returned to Sangusky after his father's death, and remained there until 1865, when he came to New York City, where he has remained in business ever since. He continued in the jewelry business and the manufacture of watches. But the close confinement was beginning to tell on his health. and this circumstance led to a venture which resulted in the greatest success.

For a long time Mr. Dewey had been studying fruit culture, especially that of the grape. He had arrived at the conclusion that the soil of Ohio was very well suited to the growth of the vine. The necessity of abandoning his occupation as watchmaker. since his health had become impaired and he had to make an effort to recover it, led him to think seriously of making an attempt at grape-growing in Ohio, This took such a hold of him that he purchased, in 1857, a farm one mile from Sandusky, and in the fall he planted a vineyard.

The venture proved an unqualified success. In 1860 his vines were bearing well. and the people of Sandusky and neighboring places came to gape with wonder over a real vineyard. The greatest interest was aroused and gradually hundreds of others began to put out vineyards. The result was that farms which could once wait for a purchaser at $75 an acre went up with a rush and sold for $400 an acre.

For two years Mr. Dewey sold his grapes for table uses. But the transition from selling the grapes to expressing their juice and selling that was a most natural one. In 1862 he made 4,000 gallons of wine. The next year he made 10,000 gallons. The business of wine-making increased each year until it had assumed proportions which re quired all of Mr. Dewey's attention. But he had recovered his health fully in this nev occupation, and was ready to give a great deal of work to it.

In 1864 a New York firm had ordered sev eral thousand gallons of wine, to be delivered on the 1st of April. He shipped the wine and an assortment of the other wine which he produced. He came on to New York himself on the 31st of March, and found that the firm which had given the order was in the hands of a Sheriff. Happily the goods had not been delivered. When Mr. Dewey tried to dispose of them he found that all the dealers to whom he applied looked on native wines, "American wines, with the greatest scepticism. They wanted only foreign brands, with nice labels in languages which they could not read. America was no place for wines! No; they didn't want his wines. So he had either to take his wines back to Ohio or else open s house of his own in New York and take the chances of popularizing the native wines. He promptly decided to do the latter. It was a great fight. All the foreign wine-dealing concerns were against the young American industry, and popular prejudice regarded domestic wines as not worthy of the name. But he succeeded in the tight. He at la got his wines into the market, and ever since he has done a large and profitable business in this line. He carries Ohio, California and North Carolina wines, and also native brandies and champagnes. Nearly all of them, as they are absolutely pure, have a value as medicinal remedies, and invalids or persons in delicate health are greatly strengthened by them. Mr. Dewey is a temperance man; that is, he believes in temperance, but it is temperance of the right kind. The wines he sells do not produce an appetite for strong drinks. They simply build up and sustain the natural forces. Mr. Dewey may well be an ardent advocate of this truth. He has experienced it in his own person. His health was so poor that he did not expect to reach more than middle age. As it is, he is an elderly gentleman of seventy-two and will probably see his ninetieth year. Mr. Dewey married a Delaware lady in 1838. Two of his sons are in business with him. One of them was born on the day his father purchased the Sandusky vineyard, Twenty-three grandchildren, of whom fifteen are living, give Mr. Dewey a well-founded claim to the title of grandfather. Such has been Mr. Dewey's business career and it is a typically American one. One of those chances which so often constitute the turning point in lives led him, by reason of his impaired health, to try the experiment of

A plan of action was hurriedly agreed upon, and the enemy was surrounded. to More Tanks of Explosive Oil to Be Loented Among the City's Masses-Yester-day's Reports on Which the Fire Commissioners Acted—That Action Another Victory for "The Evening World."

Yesterday THE EVENING WORLD printed as exclusive news the fact that the Fire Commissioners had voted to reject the application of the Standard Oil monopoly to establish storage tanks for oil in One Hundred and Fif. teenth street.

The report of Commissioner Croker, on which the refusal to grant the application was based, was as follows:

was based, was as follows:

I have conferred with representatives of the New York Board of Fire Underwriters, and submit acrewith a communication from the Chairman on Police and Origin of Fires of that body, protesting against and stating objections to granting the application of the Standard Gaslight Company, on the ground of the hazard of transporting the old through the harbor, as well as of the hazard of storing it in the tanks referred to. I have also caused an inspection and measurement to be made, the report whereof shows the capacity of each tank to be 59,788 gallons, and after deducing for thirty inches of water at the bottom, a net storage capacity for oil of 38,578 Gallons. The company's application states the capacity of each tank to be 10,000 gallons. I have also obtained the prospectus of the Standard Gaslight Company, which shows that it is the intestion of the company to establish storage tanks and gas works in this city at the following locations: Water and Moore streets, Dey and washington, Thompson and Broome, Nineteenta street—and Avenue B, toot of Kast Thirty-third street, West Fiftieth, West Sixty-eighth, E-at Seventy-seventh and East One Hundred and Fourth streets, West Fiftieth, West Sixty-eighth, E-at Seventy-seventh and East One Hundred and Fourth streets, Pleasant avenue and One Hundred and Fifteenth Street, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth street and Tenth avenue, Southern Boulevard and Alexandria avenue. In view of the facts above stated, I deem it my duty to recommend that the application of the Standard Gaslight Company for permission to store aspatha, crude petroleum and Lima oil be

The inspection and measurement referred to by Commissioner Croker were made by Prof. Henry Morton, of the Hoboken Insti-tute of Technology, who reported in these words:

words:

The maximum capacity of the gas-works in question is 3,000,000 cubic feet per day. For this there would be needed about 18,000 gallons of naphtha per day, or about the reported storage capacity of one of the tanks. This would mean that each day one tank would require to be filled while the other was being used, and that a vessel should be daily discharging its cargo of naphtha at the wharf belonging to the works, while other vessels were passing to and for in the harbor to keep up the supply. What this would in an as regards risk to property adjaces it is not easy to estimate. It is true that the present output is only 100,000 emble feet per day, but, on the other nand, it should be noted that this same company proposes to erect five other like works at other points within the city limits, and if their operations are successful what I have stated will need in the end to be multiplied by six to express the then condition of the problem.

Not only was the news of the Commission.
